1. H, the divorced husband of W, entered W's house unannounced, found her and their child C, a boy of 11 years, together in the library, closed the door and said: "You are not fit to be a mother. I know you have been hanging around with that bum and I am taking my child out of this. Now don't scream and don't try calling your mother." Whereupon H snatched C away from W and carried him off. W later recovered the custody of C, but the incident caused her intense mental distress, humiliation and resentment. Discuss H's possible tort liabilities.

2. A, an automobile manufacturer, gave to B, an unsuccessful experimental automobile, telling him that it was unstable above 30 m.p.h. and warning him that he should keep it off the highway. B, however, used it for slow driving around town. One day he left it parked on the side of the street marked "no parking" with the key in the lock, this being contrary to penal statute. C, who had purchased a car of similar appearance, in the belief that it was his car which his wife had left for him, entered it and drove off. While C was carefully driving at 40 m.p.h., the car left the road. C and a pedestrian were hurt and the car was demolished. What liabilities, if any?

3. On a foggy night, in a drunken stupor A stumbled into and fell upon a road. B, driving an automobile, when 50 feet distant, saw what appeared to be a bundle of old clothes and tried to avoid it. He was unable to do so because of a defect in the steering gear of which he had known but had forgotten. The impact with A caused the car to go into a ditch, harming B and his guest, C. What are the liabilities, if any, of A and B?

4. D, an aeroplane manufacturing company, designed a new type of plane, the Flying Shark, adapted for private civilian flying. D advised a retail dealer, X, that it would accept orders for the Flying Shark to be custom built. P ordered a Flying Shark through X, and D manufactured same and delivered it. Shortly thereafter a Flying Shark crashed during a test flight. After two weeks of investigation D decided that there was a serious defect in the design of the plane. It sent a telegram to X saying: "Advise all purchasers of Flying Sharks to ground planes until further notice." X received the telegram on Saturday noon, but decided to wait until Monday to pass on the warning. P took up his Flying Shark on Saturday afternoon. The plane crashed on its flight, doing great damage to the house of Farmer Jones and killing P. Discuss the possibilities of tort recovery by P's personal representative and Farmer Jones.

5. A finds B with a broken leg and insensible in the center of a railroad trestle 1,000 feet long, across which trains occasionally pass. He picks up B and carries him for a while passing on the way a wide spot in the trestle made for the protection of track walkers. Then, recognizing B as a notorious racketeer, A puts him down in the center of the track as he was before, but 300 feet closer to the end of the trestle. The crew of an approaching train would have seen B if they had been looking ahead. They were not looking and B is killed. What are the liabilities, if any, of A and the railroad company?
