PROGRAM NOTES

“Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion” from the Messiah

George Frideric Handel was a German-born Baroque composer famous for his operas, oratorios, anthems, and organ concertos. Born into a family indifferent to music, Handel received critical training in Halle, Hamburg and Italy before settling in London in 1712, and became a naturalized British subject in 1727. He was strongly influenced by the great composers of the Italian Baroque era, as well as the middle-German polyphonic choral tradition. “Rejoice Greatly, Oh Daughter of Zion” is part of the Messiah, one of Handel’s most renowned and well-known religious English oratorios. In the fifth scene of the first act where “Rejoice Greatly” appears, the deeds of the Messiah on earth and the response of man are summarized. It is a virtuoso coloratura soprano aria that expresses great joy for the birth of Jesus.

Concertino Op. 107

Cécile Chaminade was one of the most popular women composers of her time. Born in Paris, France, she began composing at the young age of eight, and her works were soon well-known throughout Europe. Particularly popular were her short piano pieces that fit the salon era well. In 1908, Chaminade was warmly welcomed as she made her American debut with the Philadelphia Orchestra. Her popularity in the States led to the formation of “Chaminade Clubs,” several of which are still in existence today, as a way to cultivate a love and appreciation of music. The Concertino in D Major, Op. 107 for flute and orchestra, written in 1902, remains one of her most popular compositions.

La Muse et le Poète, Op. 132

Saint-Saëns composed La Muse et le Poète in 1909. The musical dialogue between the two instruments features the violin as the muse and the cello as the poet. Although Saint-Saëns did not provide a specific programmatic explanation for this beautiful work, one could interpret the music as addressing the poet’s challenge - specifically, the struggles involved in the creative process. The poet expresses the frustration of writing throughout the cadenza-like structure where the melodic progression is dynamically and articulately aggressive. This reaches a resolution embodied by the muse: the violinist leads the orchestra out of hysteria to serenity with a moment of brilliance. The muse strikes and maintains a note that inspires a turning tide. It is in this way that Saint Saëns perhaps delivers his true message to the listener; when faced by the twilight of realization and the accompanying achievement, achieving that moment of brilliance involves taking risks. These risks expose the human intuition to context and understanding, otherwise known as inspiration.

The Sea and Sinbad's Ship from Scheherazade

Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic poem Scheherazade Op. 35 was composed in 1888. Following its first performance in Russia, it became one of the most beloved orchestral works around the world, and remains a staple today in the symphonic repertoire of many orchestras throughout the United States. Its appeal lies in its story-telling nature and musical accessibility; musicians love to perform the work and it is a perennial favorite among concert audiences. Rimsky-Korsakov wrote an introduction for the work as follows:

The Sultan Schariar, convinced that all women are false and faithless, vowed to put to death each of his wives after the first nuptial night. But the Sultana Scheherazade saved her life by entertaining her lord with fascinating tales, told seriatim, for a thousand and one nights. The Sultan, consumed with curiosity, postponed from day to day the execution of his wife, and finally repudiated his bloody vow entirely.

The four movements of Scheherazade are loosely based on these tales, known as the One Thousand and One Nights or The Arabian Nights. Tonight the orchestra performs the first movement, “The Sea and Sinbad's Ship,” where the sea is depicted as rough, stormy and dangerous, but other times as calm and inviting. Rimsky-Korsakov's memorable composition includes brilliant orchestration, lush melodies, driving, fast-moving tempos and the ability to paint colorful, large canvases of sound.
Valse Triste

This short work was originally composed as incidental music for the drama Kuolema. The action described by the music is given in the original program notes of the production:

It is night. The son, who has been watching beside the bedside of his sick mother, has fallen asleep from sheer weariness. Gradually a ruddy light is diffused through the room and there is a sound of distant music; the glow and the music steal nearer until the strains of a valse melody float distantly to our ears. The sleeping mother awakens, rises from her bed and, in her long white garment, which takes the semblance of a ball dress, begins to move silently and slowly to and fro. She waves her hands and beckons in time to the music, as though she were summoning a crowd of invisible guests. And now they appear, these strange visionary couples, turning and gliding to an unearthly valse rhythm. The dying woman mingles with the dancers; she strives to make them look into her eyes, but the shadowy guests one and all avoid her glance. Then she seems to sink exhausted on her bed and the music breaks off. Presently she gathers all her strength and invokes the dance once more, with more energetic gestures than before. Back come the shadowy dancers, gyrating in a wild, mad rhythm. The weird gaiety reaches a climax; there is a knock at the door, which flies wide open; the mother utters a despairing cry; the spectral guests vanish; the music dies away. Death stands on the threshold.

Lullaby and Finale from The Firebird Suite

The origin of The Firebird was a ballet production for impresario Sergei Diaghilev's revolutionary Ballets Russes, premiered in Paris in 1910 with choreography by Michael Fokine. In future years Stravinsky wrote three different concert versions of the work; tonight’s performance is of the second and most popular suite arrangement, written in 1919. The suite draws upon less than half of the material of the ballet score, yet it exemplifies dazzling orchestration and influences of Russian folk tunes, undoubtedly influenced by Rimsky-Korsakov, Stravinsky's only teacher. Instrumental coloring evokes the story based on a Russian folk tale where good triumphs over evil through the beautiful and magical Firebird: the opening bassoon melody of the lullaby represents a moment when evil character Kastchei has been lulled to sleep, and the famous horn solo in the finale represents the death of evil, giving rise to a glorious climax culminating in the celebration and wedding of Prince Ivan and his beloved princess.

Leslie Kinnas began studying the violin at age four in Hong Kong. Throughout high school, she was an active member and concertmaster of the Shanghai International Youth Orchestra, which brought together international students and local Chinese students.

In 11th and 12th grades, Leslie was accepted in the Association of Music for International Schools and traveled to Frankfurt, Germany, and Beijing, China to play in an orchestra comprised of students from Europe and Asia. Last fall, Leslie traveled to Cartagena, Colombia with several other University of Richmond musicians for a weeklong music tour. Currently, she studies violin and is the co-concertmaster of the University of Richmond Symphony Orchestra. In addition, she teaches violin and has performed in weddings, at churches, and at many other celebratory events. She is a double major in environmental studies and international studies, with a minor in Chinese studies. As graduation is quickly approaching, Leslie is extremely thankful for all of the opportunities that both the university and music department has offered her over the past four years.

Kevin Westergaard has been playing music his whole life. After a brief stint with the violin, he switched over to cello at the age of 3, and has been dedicatedly working on honing his technique ever since. Kevin's instruction began at the Diller Quaille School of Music in New York City, where he participated in youth orchestras and chamber groups while pursuing private instruction. During high school, he participated in the Horace Mann Symphony Orchestra and the Horace Mann Sinfonietta, including tours in North America, as well as international locations such as Argentina, Uruguay, and Japan. Since arriving at Richmond, Kevin has been holding the principal cellist position of the University of Richmond Symphony Orchestra, performed in Cartagena, Colombia at the International Festival of Orchestras and Youth, and has been exploring various avenues for the future of his musical career. He is working on pursuing music production, utilizing knowledge he attained during a bootcamp at NYU over the summer and an electric cello to compose songs he feels may appeal more to the contemporary crowd. Above all, Kevin credits his mother, Miki Takane, for blessing him with the necessary skills and helping him seize the opportunities that he has come across throughout his life.
