FOREWORD

The University of Richmond Law Review is pleased to present the second annual Allen Chair Symposium issue. The editorial board hopes that this special issue of the Law Review contributes to the national and international discourse on the state of human rights law.

This publication is intended as a literary complement to the Allen Chair symposium. Each spring the T.C. Williams School of Law conducts the symposium focusing on a topic of either national or international interest. Visiting Allen Chair professors are selected based on their expertise in the chosen topic.

The importance of this year's topic, "Human Rights Law," cannot be understated. In our often turbulent times, it is imperative that human rights law not be pushed from the forefront; a task not lost on this year's exceptional Allen Chair professors. Thomas M. Franck is the Murry and Ida Becker Professor of Law at the New York University Law School Center for International Studies. Dr. Diego García-Sayán is the Director of the United Nations Office of Human Rights in El Salvador and on leave from his position as Executive Director of the Andean Commission of Jurists. Harold Hongju Koh is the Gerald C. and Bernice Latrobe Smith Professor of International Law at the Yale Law School. Anne-Marie Slaughter is a Professor of Law at the Harvard Law School. Daniel T. Murphy, who selected this year's topic and professors, is a Professor of Law at the T.C. Williams School of Law.

I would like to express my extreme gratitude to the Allen family for their generous benefaction, without which the symposium, and this issue, would not be possible. I wish to thank Dean Harbaugh for his continued support and assistance. I also thank the Allen Chair professors, and especially Daniel T. Murphy for his generous advice and insight. Lastly, I am eternally grateful to Glenice Coombs, the Law Review's Administrative Assistant, without whose help this issue would never have materialized.

Christopher N. Crowe
Allen Chair Editor

The Law Review invites the submission of prospective articles and book reviews. Submissions must be typed and triple-spaced. Endnotes should be used instead of footnotes and all citations must conform to A UNIFORM SYSTEM OF CITATION (15th ed. 1991). Manuscripts should be addressed to the Lead Articles Editor.
