Soul to Soul

C. Bradley Jacobs

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.richmond.edu/messenger

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarship.richmond.edu/messenger/vol1988/iss1/16
Fluid
may just be natural, smooth enough to give you a notion of that boy's miraculous motions. His twiggy lightnin' fingers stroke that pure american axe, making waterfalls rythmic rockslides in comparison. The sounds are all blue
country air and clear sky; the passion a lead-spitting six-shooter evoking the latent spirit of an old ghost town.
His eyes cry the sound of the birth of the Blues onto his listeners, bathing them, purging their pain... the pains were real, mind you don't let the spontaneous modulation or tale-tellin' jazz inflections blind you to that fact, 'cause he'll set you straight-sticking one soulful note after another into your spine until you beg to mingle your tears with the sweat on the stage and the round black pool that turns the world at 33.3 rpm.

C. Bradley Jacobs

Winner of the Margaret Haley Carpenter Prize for Poetry