

5-2016

Glimpses of Marshall in the Military

Kevin C. Walsh

University of Richmond, kwalsh@richmond.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <http://scholarship.richmond.edu/law-faculty-publications>

Part of the Legal Biography Commons, and the Legal History Commons

Recommended Citation

Kevin C. Walsh, Glimpses of Marshall in the Military, 50 U. Rich. L. Rev. 69 (2016).

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the School of Law at UR Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Law Faculty Publications by an authorized administrator of UR Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact scholarshiprepository@richmond.edu.

nical for you to claim ropriate to offer your request it. Depending a with your work may Trust your instincts, rticles can be an ex-ake certain your artiournals may receive enty slots. Never ask ubmission, but to the hical about asking a ssion is reviewed.

apply when you are t apply when you are are carefully crafted rt to rule in your cli-draft an article. The your submission, the ss of placing it.

oring Legal Scholarship, blogs.com/prawfsblawg/2012 ussing the benefits of and

GLIMPSES OF MARSHALL IN THE MILITARY

*Kevin C. Walsh **

Before President John Adams appointed him as Chief Justice of the United States in 1801, John Marshall was a soldier, a state legislator, a federal legislator, an envoy to France, and the Secretary of State.¹ He also maintained a thriving practice in Virginia and federal courts, occasionally teaming up with political rival and personal friend Patrick Henry. Forty-five years old at the time of his appointment to the Supreme Court, Marshall had been serving his state and his country for a quarter century before he took judicial office.

Marshall is an exemplar of professional excellence for all lawyers and judges. But one looking for life lessons in the law from the life of John Marshall should not neglect his time as a soldier, before he became a lawyer.

“From my infancy I was destined for the bar,” Marshall would write later in his life, “but the contest between the mother country & her colonies drew me from my studies & my Father from the superintendence of them; & in September 1775, I entered into the service as a subaltern.”² Beginning in a Fauquier County militia, continuing through with the Culpeper Minutemen, and then serving as an officer in the Continental Army, John Marshall spent the better part of five years in active military service. This

* Professor of Law, University of Richmond School of Law. This essay is adapted from a CLE presentation on legal professionalism co-sponsored by the James Madison Chapter of Phi Delta Phi, the Moot Court Board, the Trial Advocacy Board, and the John Marshall Foundation. The author thanks those organizations for their sponsorship of that event dedicated to the Great Chief Justice.

1. The best single-volume biographies of John Marshall published in the past two decades are JEAN EDWARD SMITH, JOHN MARSHALL: DEFINER OF A NATION (1996) and R. KENT NEWMYER, JOHN MARSHALL AND THE HEROIC AGE OF THE SUPREME COURT (2001).

2. Letter from John Marshall to Joseph Delaplaine (Mar. 22, 1818), in VIII THE PAPERS OF JOHN MARSHALL 187 (Charles F. Hobson, ed., 1995), <http://rotunda.upress.virginia.edu/founders/default.xqy?keys=JNML-chron-1810-1818-03-22-1>.

period, from the age of nineteen to twenty-four, formed Marshall's outlook in ways that rippled outward through his entire life.³

It was in the Continental Army, Marshall later wrote, "associated with brave men from different states who were risking life and every thing valuable in a common cause believed by all to be most precious . . . where I was confirmed in the habit of considering America as my country, and Congress as my government."⁴ Marshall himself and his later biographers have drawn a direct connection between his army experience and his political outlook. "My immediate entrance into the state legislature [after serving in the military]," Marshall wrote, "opened to my view the causes which had been chiefly instrumental in augmenting [the] sufferings [of the army], and the general tendency of state politics convinced me that no safe and permanent remedy could be found but in a more efficient and better organized general government."⁵ Less appreciated than the link between Marshall's military experience and his political outlook, but no less important, is the link between Marshall the soldier and Marshall the lawyer. The influence of Marshall's military experience on his formation as a lawyer, however, was pervasive.

We have already seen how Marshall described the hostilities with "the mother country" as breaking off the studies he took under the direction of his father. But even before joining the Culpeper Minutemen in September 1775, Marshall had been training for the military to the exclusion of his legal studies. "About the time I entered my eighteenth year [in September 1773]," Marshall would later write, the controversy between Great Britain and her colonies had assumed so serious an aspect as almost to monopolize the attention of the old and the young. I engaged in it with all the zeal and enthusiasm which belonged to my age; and devoted more time to learning the first rudiments of military exercise in an Independent company of the gentlemen of the county, to training a militia company in the

3. The most comprehensive account of John Marshall's time in the military is KEITH MARSHALL JONES III, "CONGRESS AS MY GOVERNMENT": CHIEF JUSTICE JOHN MARSHALL IN THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION (1775-1781) (2008).

4. "Autobiographical Sketch," Letter from John Marshall to Joseph Story (July 25, 1827), in XI THE PAPERS OF JOHN MARSHALL 38 (Charles F. Hobson, ed., 2002), <http://rotunda.upress.virginia.edu/founders/JNML-01-11-02-0017>.

5. Id.

neighbourhood, and classics or to Black Marshall's only former tutor by George Wythe in place in early 1780 but on furlough. He of then-Governor T shall could not beg courts in Virginia w

When Marshall c a boon for business of great service to n tary friends, who w est in my favour, a expect."⁸ Before commenc was licensed as a l as a legal profession Marshall was ap ("DJAG"). He serv 1778, it seems).

As a DJAG, Mar transcribed the re ministerial and no detailed knowledge have had to have winter of 1777 into with General Wash

One interested i law might wonder spite his lack of f highly unusual, as experience as lawy three qualities sta ment.

6. Id. at 36.

7. Id. at 37.

8. Id.

9. For an account JONES, supra note 3, at 1 er, formed Marshall's his entire life.³

later wrote, "associ-who were risking life believed by all to be the habit of considers my government."⁴ have drawn a direct his political outlook. ature [after serving my view the causes menting [the] suffer-of state politics con-y could be found but neral government."⁵ hall's military expeimportant, is the link e lawyer. The influformation as a law-

cribed the hostilities studies he took unpre joining the Cul-ll had been training studies. "About the ember 1773]," Marpanies had assumed ttention of the old l and enthusiasm e to learning the ndent company of a company in the ne in the military is KEITH USTICE JOHN MARSHALL IN to Joseph Story (July 25, obson, ed., 2002), <http://rot> neighbourhood, and to the political essays of the day, than to the classics or to Blackstone.⁶

Marshall's only formal legal education—a few months of law lectures by George Wythe at the College of William and Mary—took place in early 1780, while he was still in the Continental Army, but on furlough. He received his law license, under the signature of then-Governor Thomas Jefferson, in August 1780. But Marshall could not begin his law practice at that time because the courts in Virginia were closed due to British forces.

When Marshall did begin his practice, his army experience was a boon for business. "My extensive acquaintance in the army was of great service to me," Marshall later wrote.⁷ "My numerous military friends, who were dispersed over the state, took great interest in my favour, and I was more successful than I had reason to expect."⁸

Before commencing his private practice, and even before he was licensed as a lawyer, however, Marshall had already served as a legal professional of sorts in the military. In November 1777, Marshall was appointed Deputy Judge Advocate General ("DJAG"). He served in that role for almost a year (until August 1778, it seems).

As a DJAG, Marshall would have assisted with court martials, transcribed the records of proceedings, and performed various ministerial and notarial functions. He would have had to possess detailed knowledge of military law and procedure. And he would have had to have a hardy physical constitution. For during the winter of 1777 into 1778, when Marshall served as DJAG, he was with General Washington's Main Army at Valley Forge.⁹

One interested in qualities that contribute to excellence in the law might wonder why Marshall was tapped to be a DJAG despite his lack of formal legal training or experience. (This was highly unusual, as the JAG and most DJAGs had prior practice experience as lawyers.) From the accounts of his contemporaries, three qualities stand out: intelligence, judgment, and temperament.

6. Id. at 36.

7. Id. at 37.

8. Id.

9. For an account of Marshall's experiences and responsibilities as a DJAG, see JONES, supra note 3, at 127–37.

ll's legal intelligence he had sat on as an were the functional on the JAG or DJAG acts of the case.) Incessary quality for a ntinental Army that iled military law set is young age—was at his capacity was cers, that in many tly chosen arbiter;

ated by debate, oft, which being giv-was, by sound rea-quiescence.¹⁰

unruffled—was per-quality of his charac-
emerges in clear ree army encampment
-century chronicler the history of the e snows of Valley us winter of 1778, in resentment, or ation and effort. It ake it through, but d for the men in his Marshall was Actlley Forge. Here is aughter, describing trying time:

g his sufferings at ed him. If he had

Services, 26 N. AM. REV. 1, ora note 1, at 469.
3 (1852).

[only] bread to eat, it was just as well; if only meat, it made no difference. If any of the officers murmured at their deprivations, he would shame them by good-natured raillery, or encourage them by his own exuberance of spirits. He was an excellent companion, and idolized by the soldiers and his brother officers, whose gloomy hours were enlivened by his inexhaustible fund of anecdote.¹²

Is it any surprise that Marshall's company had a higher proportion of men fit to serve than prevailed in the army as a whole?
And is not this kind of success—gutting it out and emerging with men still fit to fight, sometimes by means as simple as daily good temper and a proto-Lincolnian penchant for anecdote—exactly what the military situation demanded?

* * *

We glimpse in these sketches of Marshall in the military some of the same qualities that carried him through the rest of his personal and professional life. While Marshall is often recognized and praised for his outwardly, obvious achievements, we should not ignore the internal excellences that contributed to them and constituted him. When we attend to those, we see a different kind of greatness than is more commonly recognized as such. We see virtue for the ages, worthy of emulation today.

12. Edgar Aldrich, John Marshall as a Soldier, in PROCEEDINGS OF THE BAR ASSOCIATION OF THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE AT ITS CELEBRATION OF JOHN MARSHALL DAY 323, 331 (1901). In this version of the quotation from Slaughter's diary, I have substituted "only" bread for "no" bread, which is how the diary entry is more often quoted. See, e.g., Address of Mr. Justice Mitchell, in 1 JOHN MARSHALL: LIFE, CHARACTER AND JUDICIAL SERVICES 452, 458 (John F. Dillon, ed., 1903). Unfortunately, the original diary appears no longer to be available. See PHILIP SLAUGHTER, A HISTORY OF ST. MARK'S PARISH, CULPEPER COUNTY, VIRGINIA 108 (1877) ("Capt. Slaughter kept a diary of his campaigns, which was lost in the wreck of so many fine libraries in the late war.").